The London market was dull, apparently waiting for New York Property at Broadwayand leadership. Local brokers, on the other hand, were holding off for London to take the lead. This "waiting mood" naturally led to a listless market. The strength of sterling was alleged to be due to the holding back of bills by certain drawers of exchange, who were making the shorts in sterling "pay the piper." This theory does not, however, fully explain the dearth of bills in the face of the heavy merchandise exports. The money rates rule the international markets, and only higher interest Brisk Trading in the Car Stocks I charges here can prevent gold exports, no matter, what the balance of trade in favor of the United States.
